Liturgy and Community

We have called to mind once more that Eucharist, in the language of the ancient Church, was called among other things, synaxis, the meeting together, “the assembly. It draws and binds men together, unites them, builds up community. Conversely, the community experiences Eucharist as fulfillment, as the center of its life, something in which it shares as a totality. All this is true, but we must remember that the scope of synaxis is much wider than the individual community... The assembly to which Jesus Christ calls us is the assembly of all the children of God. The Lord does not assemble the parish community in order to enclose it but in order to open it up. The man who allows himself to be “assembled” by the Lord has plunged into a river which will always be taking him beyond the limits of his self at any one time. To be with the Lord means to be willing, with him, to seek all the children of God.

It is a favorite theme of our time that the Church is “wherever two or three are gathered in my name, “ but the reverse is also true: the community is only “ with the Lord” and “gathered in his name” provided it is entirely at one with the Church, wholly part of the whole... Liturgy is not “made” by the community; the community receives it from the whole, in the same way that it receives its own self, as community, from the whole. And it can only remain an ecclesial community by continually giving itself back in commitment to this whole.
